Description:

From Library Journal Military author Axelrod presents George S. Patton, one of America's greatest generals, as a gruff model for the corporate world; his strategies are seen as effective tools for managers in the workplace as well as on the battlefield. The ten parts, or "chapters," offer nearly 200 quotations from Patton or ideas expressed by him during World War II. The author then expands and applies these "leadership principles" to today's corporate world. What we learn here is how military tactics and strategy can be used effectively in civilian situations as well. A definition of leadershipA "A Commander will command"A and the value of loyaltyA "I prefer a loyal staff officer to a brilliant one"A are but two examples of how Patton's words can be applied to management. This work is for managers and for anyone who looks for help in leading themselves and others at work or in life. One memorable idea to glean from the book is, "You are not beaten until you admit it. Hence don't." Thank you, General Patton. Recommended for all public libraries. A David M. Alperstein, Queens Borough P.L., Jamaica, NY

Review As Sergeant and Manager of the Second Armored Division Officers' Club in Ft. Benning, Georgia, I frequently had personal contact with General Patton. Alan Axelrod is right on target with his description of the General and the comparison to corporate warfare. I recommend reading it. -- 1st Lt. Henry L. Sobel, U.S. Army (Ret.) 01010072
