Author Topic: Canon 60D (Read 522 times) Hi all I'm new to the forum so apologies if I don't post the correct threads but I've tried for ages to get this running and nothing seems to work. I'm trying to load RAW images to my 40D using the Canon 60D. The camera is up to date firmware and I've also downloaded the latest firmware and latest software for the Canon 40D. I can see the RAW files in the Camera RAW but I cannot save any as a JPEG even though the Camera software says my camera supports it. I can see my hard drive as a Mass Storage device as it is formatted as ext4. If you have the Camera Raw files open, look under the list in the top left corner. It's the camera settings you need to be looking at. The settings for how the Canon 40D handles RAW images are different to the settings of the 60D. This is why you can't set the default settings when you shoot RAW. For example, you need to change the Camera setting for "JPEG Settings" to "Use Maximum Quality". This is not the default setting. You need to set the default settings for "Canon JPEG settings" to "Maximum Quality" for the 40D. Once you have done this, you will be able to select "Maximum Quality" when shooting RAW, and it will save the file as a JPEG. To save the RAW files as a JPEG, open the camera's menu, select the settings option, and then select "Format" and then select "JPEG" and save as a JPEG. For other settings, you would want to go to the Format menu and change the Camera Settings there. Sorry for the late reply but I've been away for a week or so but it's good to hear that I'm not alone. I checked the Camera Raw settings but could not find any in the option you mention. I'll try and find them again. @Hombre Thank you very much. What you are saying makes perfect sense and what I already thought. It seems that the Camera does not have the old settings anymore. Anyway, the test shot was perfect.

Calcium chromium-manganese concentration in unfertilized eggs and newly fertilized embryos of the sea urchin Lytechinus pictus was determined by x-ray microanalysis. The micrometer-sized x-ray microanalysis method was used to examine the concentration of trace metal elements (Ca, Cr, Mn) in the developing sea urchin embryos. The sea urchin eggs and the first-cell stage embryos contained 7.22 +/- 0.46 microM Fe and 4.24 +/- 0.48 microM Ni. The sea urchin eggs and the first-cell stage embryos contained 45.10 +/- 2.60 microM Ca, 0.26 +/- 0.04 microM Cu, 36.68 +/- 1.50 microM Mg, and 19.43 +/- 0.95 microM Zn. In the sea urchin eggs, the concentrations of Ca, Cr, and Mn were determined to be 0.34 +/- 0.03, 0.17 +/- 0.03, and 0.36 +/- 0.08 microM, respectively. In the sea urchin embryos the concentrations of Ca, Cr, and Mn were determined to be 0.41 +/- 0.05, 0.16 +/- 0.01, and 0.47 +/- 0.06 microM, respectively. These results suggest that the concentration of Mn was increased as the embryo developed and that Ca is essential for normal sea urchin embryogenesis. Friday, July 10, 2014 Santa Cruz & Summer, 2013 Back in June and July 2013 my husband and I took a long weekend to drive down the California coast to Santa Cruz. It was our 4th trip to California in the past four years and we've been to other coastal states like Oregon, Washington, and Hawaii in the past too. We needed a long break from our Kentucky winter routine. I had some time off work, we decided to go and explore California and enjoy some sun. After we got down to Santa Cruz 595f342e71
