The management of small indeterminate pulmonary nodules in patients with chronic lymphocytic leukaemia. Forty-seven patients with chronic lymphocytic leukaemia (CLL) and no evidence of lung disease underwent bronchoscopy and transbronchial lung biopsy (TBLB) of suspect nodules (diameter less than 2 cm) detected on chest radiographs. Twenty-five patients had indeterminate nodules and 22 had probable nodules. Histological examination of the TBLB confirmed the diagnosis in 14 cases, showed no evidence of CLL in seven cases and was indeterminate in four patients. There were no complications related to the TBLB procedure. In patients with CLL and indeterminate nodules the TBLB was of value in excluding CLL as the cause of the pulmonary nodule. About Our History Some Origins Before our emergence, the American homeless used to be referred to as "tramps." The term came into wide use after a widely publicized tramp in the late 1890s was depicted in Henry Lawson's poem Tramp. That inspiration led to a popular parlor game called "trampology" in which groups at the time would answer the question, "How do you like to be tramped upon?" We haven't played that game in decades, but we know that history certainly reveals that it was far more than a Game of Thrones-esque phrase for tramps. In the history of charity, there was a time when the poor and homeless in our country were known for their want, and could be said to have been "tramped on. 595f342e71
